

Dear Global Talent Co. team,

Your posting says this is not a narrow execution role — you want someone who spots where repetitive work is slowing the company down and owns the roadmap to fix it. That describes my last four years almost exactly, in order.

I started inside operations: as an automation-focused executive assistant coordinating distributed teams, I was the person who felt every manual workflow personally. So I rebuilt them — task orchestration, communication workflows, and reporting dashboards on Airtable and Zapier that cut follow-up overhead 40%. That earned me the automation seat full-time, where I now design AI-powered systems for SaaS and service businesses: a Claude + n8n + Airtable lead-qualification agent that cut response times 30–60%, and document and reporting automations saving teams 10–25+ hours weekly across HubSpot, Salesforce, and Zoho.

The sequence matters: I don't automate what a tool makes easy — I automate what the process data says is expensive. Sales, ops, support, people workflows all yield to the same discipline: map, measure, automate, document, and make adoption stick with non-technical colleagues.

A company that places remote talent worldwide will appreciate the last detail: I'm the kind of hire you champion — worldwide-remote from Nigeria (GMT+1, flexible overlap), available immediately.

I'd welcome a conversation about what your internal roadmap's first quarter could look like.

Ugochukwu Okoronkwo ugochukwuokoronkwo01@gmail.com · ugo-landing.vercel.app · github.com/Hugo0007