

Dear Hiring Team,

Most automation builders can wire up n8n. Far fewer have shipped real work with Claude Code and Relevance AI — and fewer still started their careers on the business side, learning why processes break before learning how to automate them. Your consultant role sits exactly at that intersection, and so does my last four years.

At Manny Hall and Associate I began as an executive management assistant partnering directly with leadership on operational problems, then moved into building the solutions myself: AI agent workflows in n8n, Zapier, and Airtable powered by Anthropic Claude, integrated with Salesforce, HubSpot, and Zoho via REST APIs and webhooks. The results were measurable — lead response times down 30–60%, 10–25+ hours saved weekly per client team, follow-up overhead cut 40%. Every build shipped with SOPs and documented workflow logic, because a consultant's automation that only the consultant understands is a liability, not an asset.

A founder juggling multiple ventures needs someone who can take an ambiguous "this feels inefficient," map the actual process, recommend the right-sized solution, and deliver it documented. That's the motion I already run — now with Claude Code as the force multiplier.

I'm in WAT (UTC+1), aligned with European mornings, and available immediately. I'd welcome the chance to walk through a real system end to end.
